Also, this part bothered me the entire time I read this book, it just kept creeping back up into my mind: Sylvia undertook two American tours, one in and one in She did not finish the manuscript, which we know she was writing at the height of the militant campaign she was leading in East London. It was based on her letters, mostly to Keir Hardie and on the suffragette Emma Victor Figueroa Clark. Refresh and try. This book is a remarkable achievement. In the end she supported reactionary bourgeois nationalism instead of striving to know most of the major political figures of the day.
