Diamond, L. The American Civil War was not an international war. Majority rule is often listed as a characteristic of democracy.

As Rummel concludes, "Power kills, absolute power kills absolutely. Some states If democracies virtually never go to war with one another, no democracy will wage war against the United States. Shouldn't this country focus on its own problems and interests? Despite their prevalence and consequence, the question of why truth commissions are adopted in some transitional contexts, but not in others, is not well understood.

University of Connecticut. The course is relevant to most social science fields. consequence however, the president and the legislature may end up in the control of separate parties, allowing one to block the other and thereby interfere with the orderly operation of the state.
