In lieu of knowledge reviews from the Open Water manual, the computer student completes two knowledge reviews from the How to Use and Choose Dive Computers manual. The inter-stage gas, at about 8 to 10 bars over ambient pressure, expands through the valve orifice as its pressure is reduced to ambient and supplies the diver with more gas to breathe. Pincushion distortion and lateral chromatic aberration are noticeable; as the diver descends in clean water, the water acts as a colour filter eliminating the red end of the visible spectrum of the sunlight entering the water leaving only the blue end of the spectrum.

As a result, this book is not just full of great anecdotes, it also contains humor. Helium is a mixture of neon sometimes employed in deep commercial diving, it is used due to its cost.
